Compliance, Training and Risk

Matthew Homes recognises that the best way of ensuring adherence is by the provision of training within the Company, the promotion and encouragement of the scrutiny of its activities.

However, Matthew Homes also recognises that there may be a higher risk of modern slavery or human trafficking in the work forces employed or used by contractors or agents. Consequently Matthew Homes has adopted a more rigorous analysis of the contractors and agents employed to ensure that they are compliant. The tendering process now includes a requirement that the sub-contractors, consultants and suppliers are committed to ensuring against acts of modern slavery.

Matthew Homes carries out inductions for all its workers, both in administration and construction sites on the Modern Slavery Act 2015 in its businesses and its supply chains. Directly employed staff by Matthew Homes are checked to ensure they have a right to work in the UK.
